1. The former German seaplane base of Nest, which lies on the Baltic Sea, was turned over to the Polish Air Force by the Soviets in 1948. The Polish Air Force used this base for training purposes, and about 120 Soviet and German-made seaplanes were stationed there.
2. In January 1950, the Soviet Air Force again occupied this seaplane base. The residents of Grossmöllen, Nest, Deep, and Lease were evacuated, and the area between Grossmöllen and Lease was declared a restricted area. In addition to the Soviet Air Force garrison, about 200 Soviet civilians and workers and about 100 Poles, who are believed to have come from a concentration camp, are billeted in the area. Neither the Soviets nor the Poles are allowed outside of this restricted area.
3. Improvements have been made on the roads and railroad lines leading to the base. Large quantities of building material were transported to the restricted area by road and rail. A direct railroad line from Köslin to Grossmöllen is under construction.
4. Since early February 1950, extensive nighttime and daytime flying has been observed. Land-based planes have also been seen landing in this area for the first time. Towards the end of February, Marshal Rokossovski and high-ranking Soviet Air Force officers inspected the base.
